Comments on the Definition of a Significant Deficiency

We welcome the opportunity to comment on the definition of a significant deficiency. While we believe it is appropriate to define significant deficiencies as matters that are important enough to merit attention, it is equally important to provide guidance on the proper classification of a significant deficiency. Based on our experience, such guidance should:

- Help promote efficiency and eliminate inconsistencies in the evaluation and classification of identified deficiencies, and
- Provide auditors and management with a basis to agree on the manner in which identified deficiencies should be classified.

In the absence of such guidance, the concept of “less severe than a material weakness” could be subject to debate and could result in unnecessary compliance costs as management’s judgment is being questioned. Small public companies could definitely use the guidance given their limited resources and our intent to keep 404 compliance more cost-effective.

To help ensure the proper classification of each identified deficiency, management should be encouraged to apply qualitative and quantitative thresholds in evaluating each such deficiency and classify it according to its likelihood and potential dollar impact. For consistency purposes, any such clarification should be incorporated in Auditing Standard No. 5 to ensure proper alignment.
